How to make a garden table out of pallets

Sharpen your skills with using pallet wood in making household item so simply and creatively. Give some time and try different crafts and furniture commodities, like pallet vertical garden and pallet planter box, whenever you see pallet wood around. DIY pallet garden table are of great usage and popularity due to multipurpose garden decorations and needs. We make pallet garden table with pallet in step wise process. First make a pallet plane which will serve as table surface. This can be done by arranging three pallets below and roof of planks on them. Then attach the legs for DIY pallet garden table with four planks of same size. Add glue to all joints and grip them for some time with rubber or elastic string to have powerful grip and your garden table design is ready to place in garden. You can customize it with use of colors and paints on it for heart's choice template and model.Attachment of pallet wood legs of equal and sharp cutting for your pallet garden table target.Put glue on all joints and bind elastic string for some time to have great and powerful grip of joint and durability of your pallet garden table. If you've never made pallet furniture before, then this DIY pallet garden table is a great way to start! It's super practical for the summer, and lets you put your new DIY skills to practice! Pallets present the ideal solution if you want to revamp your garden furniture but don't want to break the bank. You can make pretty much any type of cheap and sustainable furniture with them - that's why we've dedicated a whole section to pallet projects on our home page! Tools and Materials To make this DIY pallet garden table we used the following tools and materials: Cost, time and difficulty The difficulty rating on this DIY project is easy as it can be completed using either manual or power tools. If you decide to complete it using manual tools, then it will of course take longer to finish. In our case, it took us a full day's work using power tools. You should also keep in mind that both the condition the pallets are in, as well as any decoration on the surface, will impact the completion time. The approximate price of materials is around £20, however this may increase depending on how many different layers of varnish you decide to use. On another note, you can purchase some of the tools and materials used via this sample shopping basket. DIY Pallet Garden Table Tutorial Step 1: Dismantle the pallet The first step is to dismantle the pallet using a reciprocating saw or a crowbar. In our case we used a European pallet measuring 120cm long and 80cm wide. If you use a reciprocating saw, it is important to remember that the blade must be suitable for cutting both wood and metal. Meanwhile, with the crowbar, you should take care when levering to avoid damaging the wood. Step 2: Sand or plane the pallet boards The next step is to sand the boards, because pallet wood usually has plenty of imperfections, dampness, splinters, etc. To sand the surface, use an orbital sander. If the boards are in particularly bad condition then we recommend planing down the surface first before sanding them. By doing so, you'll save a lot of time when it comes to sanding. Step 3: Cut the parts Next, cut the boards using a mitre saw or a handsaw. The parts you need to cut are: 10 planks measuring 45cm long for the table top 2 crossbeams measuring 65cm long and another 2 measuring 43cm, to make the rectangular frame 8 planks measuring 13cm, with one corner cut to a 50° angle, for the legs. Step 4: Assemble your DIY Pallet Garden Table Once you have cut the parts, you can assemble your DIY pallet garden table following this order: Join the crossbeams that form the rectangular structure Screw on the legs Attach the planks that make up the table top 4.1.- Rectangular frame Screw a pair of angle brackets to the 65cm and 43cm long crossbeams, as demonstrated in the following image. 4.2.- Screw on the legs The legs are formed by two planks joined at a right angle. Each one should have the side partially cut to a 50° angle using the mitre saw. To screw them to the structure, the following steps should be followed: Use the pocket hole jig to help you drill holes in the planks, making two diagonal holes in each. Screw one side to the bottom of the table frame. Screw on the other side to form a right angle, as can be seen in the picture below: 4.3.- Table top The table top is made up of 45cm long planks which you should screw horizontally onto the table structure. Step 5: Treat the wood and decorate the table The next step is to protect and colour the wood with varnish. This type of finish is ideal for deck or outdoor furniture, as it allows the wood to breathe and helps regulate its internal moisture. In this example, we have combined dark and bright colours by using masking tape to create a geometric design with triangles in white, turquoise, red, green and grey. When finished, your DIY Pallet Garden Table made from pallets should look similar to this. This article was written by: Bricoydeco and translated. It is amazing for curious children and adults alike to watch seeds in their garden grow and then nurture them into something much larger than the tiny original seedlings. There are many plants that take very little maintenance while others need the utmost attention. All plants though will have a much better chance of surviving and thriving if transplanted correctly into the right soil with appropriate pruning, if necessary. Soil Rather than just putting any old soil on top of your plants, consider getting soil blends that offer both macro and micronutrients for your garden. It will help provide higher quality and a better yield production from your plant. Better yet, if you create a lot of compost in your home and have a small garden, adding two to three inches of organic matter on top will make your plants extremely happy. If you do not produce enough organic matter in the home and/or it isn't in your budget to purchase it, it is possible to find free topsoil advertisements in the local paper. Make sure to look into what type of soil is best for your specific plants, what type of climate is ideal and how often it needs to be watered. Transplanting If you are planting from seed and later transplanting them into your garden, there are a few things that should be done in preparation. First, make sure the soil you have chosen in the bed is loosened at least a shovel length deep and a good amount of organic matter is thoroughly mixed in. Next, check the moisture level and determine if it is too dry or wet and adjust accordingly. Take the appropriate measures in preventing future weed growth which will give the transplants a good healthy chance of surviving. Once they are ready to be transplanted, dig a planting hole that is only a little larger than the root ball and roughly the same depth. Carefully place it into the hole and gently press the soil around it to help ensure there is a strong contact between the soil and the roots and don't forget to water it. Cuttings Cuttings are also a popular alternative if you don't have the time to plant your favorite seed from scratch. There are numerous plants that will root easily from cuttings if done correctly and with proper care. If you are wondering how to root fig tree cuttings, for example, try and take the six to eight-inch cutting from a stem that is strong rather than a green stem which is more likely to rot. Ideally, take the cutting when the plant is dormant and put in a plastic pot that is filled with moistened soil. Cuttings, in general, should be anywhere from three to six inches long and made with a sharp cut as it is easier for shoots to develop into new roots if they are cut cleanly rather than mashed. Some choose to dip it into rooting hormone before putting it in the pot. Have patience with these cuttings as they may take a month or two before they take root. Pruning Some plants, such as rose bushes, will need to be pruned regularly. This is done to both remove dead, diseased or damaged stems and prevent attracting insects or diseases from developing. The majority of plants will often be pruned right before it breaks dormancy and after the final frost in the spring, but there are some that may need to be pruned continuously throughout the year. Cutting roses back are done differently depending on what look you are aiming for. Light pruning involves thinning out less than a third of the plant which increases the number of short-stemmed flowers that appear. Moderate pruning involves five to twelve canes being cut 18-24 inches making for a larger bush and severe pruning leaves only three to four canes that are six to ten inches high and result in the fewest but largest blooms. Basic Gardening Principles If you are new to gardening, all of these tips may be overwhelming, but as long as you know these basic gardening principles, you will be fine. First, once you have decided on what plants fit the look you are hoping for, the climate you live in and the amount of maintenance you will have time for, it is important to make sure you are starting with the healthiest version of that plant meaning it should be insect and disease free. Once it is rooted in the healthy soil, make sure it is watered on a regular basis. After it is established, the rainfall should suffice, depending on the climate, but may need your assistance if you are going through a dry spell. Finally, layer in mulch right after pruning. This will help with conserving the moisture in the soil and blocking the harsh sunlight from the beds. The lack of light will reduce the chances of weed seeds from germinating, giving your plants a better chance of survival and a lot less work for you. MORE FROM LIFE123.COM
